Teaching Grammar

- Overloading students with too many uses of a structure or complex terminology can hinder their understanding and application of grammar.

- Higher-level students can handle more complexity, but it's still important to ensure they understand each use clearly.

- Introducing one grammar structure at a time helps students grasp the nuances and apply the grammar effectively without feeling overwhelmed.

- The goal of teaching grammar is to enable students to use grammar structures in real-world communication, balancing controlled practice with free practice.

- Excessive teacher talking time can reduce student participation; it's important to balance explanations with opportunities for students to practice and apply what they've learned.
